Coat Redesign for Gianna

Emile Al-Billeh

Original Design

Light fur around convertible collar (Maintains clean look when lying flat, and optimal warmth around neck when stood up)

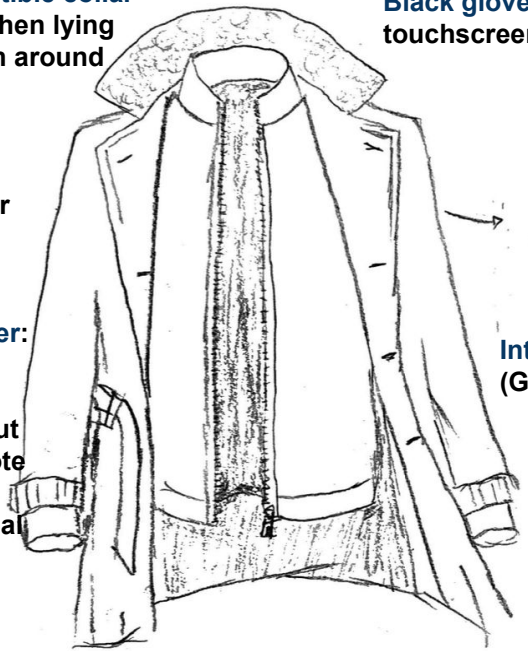
Black gloves, thin, and touchscreen-capable

Low bulk shoulders (Tote never slips)

Hidden back micro vents (No one sees them but she feels the difference)

A. Outer shell: Navy (or deep black), wool, water resistant, can be spot cleaned

B. Invisible warmth liner: A thin, removable insulated liner (Warmth gain without puffer volume, so tote and mobility stay unchanged), charcoal black, machine washable



Interior gloves pocket (Gloves included)

Back vertical slit (For mobility and comfortable seating in tight places like subway)

Two hip pockets

Self-fabric belt to control tightness around the waist and create sleek composed look even on coldest days

Coldest days look:

- Inner layer zips up for practicality and to seal maximum warmth
- Outer layer has buttons for classy aesthetic

"The Urban Anchor" is a structured, midnight navy wool-cashmere Crombie coat designed specifically for the goal-oriented commuter. To address Gianna’s primary frustration, it features a "Tote-Lock" shoulder—a structured seam with subtle friction detailing that prevents her bag from slipping, ensuring she never feels wide or clumsy in tight spaces. The coat utilizes a high funnel neck instead of a hood for a clean profile and closes with hidden magnetic fasteners, offering the speed of a zipper with the elegance of a button-down. Lined with invisible temperature-regulating fabric, it automatically adapts between the freezing street and the humid subway, keeping her cool and "put together" without requiring her to check the weather forecast.
